

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSSION AND SUGGESTION

In this chapter, the writer presents the conclusions and suggestions related to the study. Based on the analysis, the writer comes to the following conclusions.

5.1 Conclusion.

Based on the results of data collection by researchers, it can be concluded that, in Manggaraian language, there are various types of emotions and their respective expressions from the data contained in chapter four as follows:

1. There are several expressions of verbal emotions that are often used in Manggaraian language. One example is in expressing angry emotions; Rua ngai pucu daku (You make me angry), sad expression; De ba'eng laing (What a pity!), happy expression; Nisang de'it nai daku (My heart is very happy), fear expression; Raos ngai wulu wekig (Ouch...my body hairs gooseboomps), disgust expression; Ole bapa/gomeng diha hio a (How greedy he is) and surprise expression; Olee Mori campee (Oh God help me. Please!). In Manggaraian language, there are so many emotional expressions and of course its use is not only in one situation but in various situations.
2. These expressions are used in different context to express different meaning. Furthermore, each expression has both lexical and grammatical meaning.

5.2 Suggestion

In line the significance of the study and the result of the data analysis, some suggestion would be offered to many sides accordingly as shown in the following:

1. Experts of linguistic

The experts of linguistics and other related subjects are suggested to do a continued study or similar study to confirm and extend the linguistic evidence of expression of verbal emotions in Manggaraian language.

2. Linguistic researchers

Other researchers are suggested to conduct other researchers focusing on other linguistics areas such as phonology.

3. The Manggaraian language speaker

Manggaraian language is one of the local language that must be taught to young generation will not face endangerment. The Manggaraian native speakers should feel proud speaking their language is very interesting and challenging to study.
